At 50 Andy St. George is fat, Santa-Claus bellied, with a black beard and hair showing no gray. He smiles easily and often, generally with accompanying added emphasis in his speaking. He has a heavy accent. Hungarian. Royalist still. His wife, also his research assistant and typist, saysshe wants him to be a male chauvenist. They appear to be somewhat detached from their child/children, who have more modern views. Andy does not appear to be the kind of portly man who raided Cuba. More like a professor. I was really surprised to see how round he had let himself become. Bob Brown, on the other hand, while his light brown hair is thinning, has kept himself in manly condition, carries himself erectly but not with conspicuous military attitude. He affects modist dress, like a moderate graduate motocycle clubber, going in for browns, in sports jacket and amply-adorned leather jacket.1125/73